Dear Mr. Fay.

The young man
accompanied by his mother & brother - the latter a very intelligent young man - called on me today with the accompanying introduction from the Auditor. The brother was the spokesman for the party - I seemed to think that he may have had something to do with that you have found fault with, as it has been in his company

that your clerk has visited questionable places, but, as he seemed to reg, under his protection also. For this he seems very sorry. I think it would be well for you to hear what the elder brother has to say -
before finally acting,

but I shall not undertake to question your action whatever you
finally decide to be proper.

Respectfully yours
J. M. Russell

Dear Mr. Fox,

The young man accompanied by his mother & brother – the latter a very intelligent young man – called on my today with the accompanying introduction from the 3rd auditor. The brother was the spokesman for the party - & seemed to think that he may have had something to do with what you have found fault with, as it has been in his company that your clerk has visited questionable places, but, as he seemed to urge, under his protection also. For this he seems very sorry. I think it would be well for you to hear what the elder brother has to say – before finally acting, but I shall not undertake to question your actions whether you finally decide to be proper.

Respectfully yours,
James P. Kimball
